Maybe today isn't your day. Perhaps you left your backpack on the bus, your lunch on the counter, and your homework on your desk. Now you're on the way to class, horribly unprepared for the school day ahead. Unfortunately I can't help you get your backpack back, but I can at least give you the ability to take notes in class. All you need is access to a library printer, and one of these free printable lined writing paper templates. Download one of the 6 sheets below, and you'll be able to take notes just like normal. Of course you'll still need a pencil, but you can probably borrow one from a friend, or find one lying around in the hallway. The lines on these printable lined writing paper templates are spaced 0.375" apart. The first printable is your standard notebook paper sheet. Next we have a yellow notebook paper sheet, like you see in legal pads. The third printable notebook page has black lines. The fourth and fifth writing pages are landscape format. Downloading Instructions: Click on a lined writing paper template. The corresponding PDF version will open in your browser. After it loads, save it to your computer or send it right to your printer. This trick to organizing your paper notebook is simple, efficient, and only requires your writing utensil. Adam Akhtar describes the process on his blog Highfive, and says he discovered the tip while in Japan. The set up is simple, but works very well. Take your empty notebook and pick a page to be your "table of contents," or list of how you plan to categorize your notebook's sections. Akhtar makes his categories page the very last page, but I don't see why you couldn't use the first page if you'd rather do that. List out your categories, each one on their own line. Whenever you fill a new page in your notebook, mark the page by darkening the furthest edge of the paper on the same line that your category is listed on. Now you should be able to see what pages are in what category just by looking at your table of contents and the edge of pages in your notebook. Flip through your handy notebook and find exactly what you're looking for in no time. If you want your notebook to be better for scheduled productivity and organized for time, check out the bullet journal method. If pen and paper are your favorite tools, or at least are the ones you're most comfortable using to Read more A Little Known Hack from Japan to Get Your Notebook Organized | Highfive Photo by Adam Akhtar.
